ABSTRACT

A guide to help determine the minimum academic records that should accompany the documentation of participants proposed for study in U.S. universities and colleges is presented to assist the Overseas Mission staff of the Agency for International Development. The information should also be valuable for foreign student admissions officers in U.S. universities, since it identifies, in a convenient and consistent form, the educational credentials that should be available for applicants from each of 84 countries. The format is as follows: column one lists the two major levels of study in U.S. higher education: undergraduate and graduate. Each level is further divided: freshman, transfer, and unclassified/special at the undergraduate level; masters, Ph.D., and unclassified/special at the graduate level. In column two, the certificates, diplomas, and degrees that should accompany applications for admission to each level are specified, and in column three, the documentation required in addition to the certificates, diplomas, and degrees is described. For programs that fall into the undergraduate transfer and undergraduate unclassified/special categories on the lists, it is also desirable that syllabi of the programs be included with the dossier, although this is not essential to the initial placement of an applicant. Details regarding nearly 90 countries are provided. (SW)

HE 014 535

In June, 1964, the Agency for International Development, Office of International Training (AID/OIT) entered into a contract with the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO) for professional assistance in achieving the most effective selection, admission, and placement of AID participants in U.S. universities and colleges. Since that time, more than 1,000 members of AACRAO, in approximately 500 institutions, have participated in the project.

One of the project's regular, ongoing services is the appointment by AACRAO of admissions officers and graduate deans to AID/OIT for periods of two to three weeks each, throughout the year, to examine the qualifications of participants proposed for academic study. As a result, only participants for whom there is reasonable assurance of success in the fields of study proposed in the U.S. are submitted for placement in U.S. universities and colleges.

AACRAO has a membership of more than 7,000 registrars and admissions officers, representing more than 2,000 universities and colleges, and including all of the institutions where AID academic participants are placed.

PREFACE

The purpose of "Foreign Educational Credentials Required for Consideration of Admission to Universities and Colleges in the United States" is to assist AID Overseas Mission staff members and cooperating country personnel in determining the minimum academic records which should accompany the documentation of participants proposed for study in U.S. universities and colleges. This report should also be a valuable resource for foreign student admissions officers in U.S. universities, since it identifies, in a convenient and consistent form, the educational credentials which should be available for applicants from each of 84 different countries.

Several steps were followed in the preparation of this report. The format was developed and reviewed by professional credential analysts from universities and colleges throughout the United States. Secondly, credential analysts were selected to prepare the list of documents required for applicants from each country. Assignments were made on the basis of experience with applicants from the countries concerned. A third stage involved a review of the listing of documents for each country by another credential analyst experienced in evaluating applications from that country. Each listing was then edited to assure clarity and consistency.

We are deeply indebted to Valerie Woolston, Director of International Education Services, University of Maryland-College Park, who directed this project and served as editor of the publication. We are also deeply indebted to Hattie Jarmon, Education Specialist, Academic Advisory Service, Office of International Training, Agency for International Development, without whose leadership and advice this project could not have been completed, and to the following persons who prepared and reviewed the format and content of this publication.

SUGGESTIONS FOR USE

In determining eligibility for admission, U.S. universities and colleges normally consider the level of previous academic study completed, the appropriateness of the completed study for the desired field of specialization, and the quality of the marks earned during previous study. Therefore, the admitting institutions need copies of certificates, diplomas, degrees, and any supporting documentation which would assist their admissions officers in judging the quality of the work done. Official evidence of the award of a degree, diploma, or certificate is required. In addition, documentation in the form of a university or institutional record of courses completed and marks earned (which in the United States is known as a transcript) is needed.

Each page of this publication lists the credentials and documentation required for consideration of admission from a single foreign country to colleges and universities in the United States. The country is identified in the upper left-hand corner of the page, and is followed by the three-digit A.I.D. identification number for that country.

Column one lists the two major levels of study in U.S. higher education: undergraduate and graduate. Each level is further divided: freshman, transfer, and unclassified/special at the undergraduate level; master, Ph.D., and unclassified/special at the graduate level.

In column two, the certificates, diplomas, and degrees which should accompany applications for admission to each level are specified, and in column three, the documentation required in addition to the certificates, diplomas, and degrees is described.

For programs that fall into the I(B) (undergraduate transfer) and I(C) (undergraduate unclassified/special) categories on the lists, it is also desirable that syllabi of the programs be included with the dossier, although this is not essential to the initial placement of an applicant.

The lists of certificates, diplomas, degrees, and supporting documents are not exhaustive, but are the most commonly required documentation from each country by admitting universities in the U.S. If there is a question as to whether or not a document should be submitted, it should be submitted.

All documents should be copies which are certified and should be translated if the original documents are not in English. Both the certified copy of the original documents and translations should be submitted.

If complete, proper documentation is presented, U.S. universities and colleges will be able to expedite the decision regarding admission, and the level of placement of the participant will be made more judiciously.
